/dp/1841779144 > More than half of gardening writers and experts are in favor of organic gardening. The most popular organic gardening methods are those of the Spanish. What do the Spanish mean? People who have a garden that is not cultivated organically in Spain are called pseudo organico-growers. > Here is a video of a young Japanese girl by the name of Aya Kawaguchi. She has been practicing urban agriculture, so she has become very skilled at cultivating and harvesting a wide variety of food. Her best-selling book is called “The Tiny Life.” You can read more about her story at www.ajakinaguchi.com. > “We believe that the only way to solve the world’s problems is to grow our own food.” – Jose Barea, co-founder of La Churrera Organic Garden. > According to the United Nations, as of 2015, one billion people live in extreme poverty. That means they have very few resources, not enough food to eat, and little, if any, access to clean water and sanitation. World Vision’s goal is to end the gap between those who are “extreme poor” and those who are not, through global initiatives that promote food security. > “We believe that the only way to solve the world’s problems is to grow our own food. We believe that everyone deserves the right to food, regardless of financial status, where they live or their ethnicity.” – Jose Barea, co-founder of La Churrera Organic Garden. > You’ve probably heard that without rain, the entire planet would perish. This is true. However, global warming is also a cause of drought. In fact, it is estimated that global warming has contributed to 40-50% of the droughts around the world. > To find out how to grow food and avoid global warming, read more about climate change. > As the world’s population grows, the demand for food is rising. However, many experts say that the world’s food supply is growing much faster than the population. > There are currently an estimated 2.5 billion hungry people in the world. > The World Bank report says that food scarcity has been the world’s most important challenge since the Industrial Revolution. > The United Nations projects that by 2050, the number 82157476af
